

Mike Yesudas is an IBM Distinguished Engineer and the CTO for Supply Chain in IBM's AI Applications Business Unit. He joined IBM in 2010 as the Global Leader for Technical Services in IBM's Industry Cloud Solutions. Mike graduated from the Indian Institute of Technology, Kharagpur in 1989 and started his career working on Automotive Supply Chain and Sourcing at Tata Motors. He moved to Houston, Texas and worked in the Oil and Gas industry until 1995, following by Software based Analysis in Construction Industry in Australia. In 1998, Mike joined Environmental Industry for noise and pollution control architecting and supporting systems at many major airports around the world. Mike joined Hewlett Packard in 1999 – as a Performance and Capacity Planning specialist for Enterprise Systems for Healthcare, Telecommunications, Mining and Utilities.

In 2001, Mike returned to the United States as a Performance Architect in the Cable TV industry in Silicon Valley followed by GE's Energy Business Unit in Atlanta. In 2005, Mike took up the role of Performance Leader at Sterling Commerce (acquired by IBM in 2010). At Sterling and IBM, Mike has been the key technical leader and trusted advisor for clients in Retail, Consumer Packaged Goods, and Logistics in the United States, Canada, Latin America, UK, European Union, UAE, India, Japan and Australia. Mike is currently the technical leader for the AI Applications Expert Labs team focused on Supply Chains and Multi-Enterprise Business solutions. Mike is based out of Dallas, Texas and has a Masters in Engineering from the University of Houston, Texas and a Masters in Computer Science from Monash University, Australia.

